Rethinking Tomorrow's Values

A new way to view yesterday's values in the context of today's world

By Andrew Welch

Climate change, cultural diversity, work/life balance, social inequity, electoral reform - all these challenges have a common thread that might surprise you, according to Andrew Welch, author of The Value Crisis. His unique perspective on numbers and how we measure value offers a subtle but powerful explanation for our accelerating self-destructive behaviours, and what the solutions for the next generation might entail.

Andrew Welch is an author, software developer, theatre director, disaster management responder, and the top-ranked Town Crier in Ontario. He has spent the past twelve years reading, thinking, writing, and speaking about value systems and ecological economics.
